

Every artifact is hashed from its inputs, so changing one (say B2) creates a new evaluation identity, even when the root intent is unchanged. A hash proves artifact identity, not functional equivalence.